Tribology The word tribology was coined only just over twenty years ago and appears in only the most up to date of dictionaries; however, the topics with which tribologists are concerned have been of vital interest to scientists, engineers, and those who design or operate machinery, for as long as mechanical devices have existed.

Introduction (Chapter 1) - Engineering Tribology

Richard Price Williams was born on 22 November 1827 in London, a son of Doctor John Morgan Williams, of Bridgend, Glamorgan. He was educated in London. He went on to become a pupil of George Heald, who was Thomas Brassey's engineer on the construction of the Lancaster, Carlisle, and Caledonian Railways in 1845-6. Afterwards, he was an apprentice in the locomotive works of Kitson, Thomson and ...
